At no time this season have the Na tionals shown better form than in the three games they have played against three games they have played against opposing fielders. There is seldom a game Boston. Joe Engel, who has always been more or less effective against | WASH'N. the champions, is slated to do the pitching for the Nationals, and Bedient is the Schaefer, 2h twirler who will oppose him. To date Milan, cf. the series with Boston stands seven to Gandil, 1h. the series with Boston stands seven to Shanks, if. the games that the two teams are scheduled to play have been played.

When Boston appears here for the last Williams* time this season Hooper will have to hit the ball further than he did on either occasion of his circuit drives yesterday, for by that time the new right field will un-doubtedly be in use and high flies such Yerkes, 2b. as he hit yesterday will in all probability wis. It was a peculiar coincidence that Hoop- Wagner, ss. er should open both games with a drive over the right field fence. Peculiarly enough he had a ball and strike called on m on both occasions when he hit.

the afternoon game, for they hit Johnson hard in this round, probably be-Johnson hard in this round, probably because he was not properly warmed up. A home run, a triple, a hit batsman and a single only netted a single run, however.

Gandil. Hit by pitcher—By Johnson, 1. Umpires o'Loughlin and Egan. Time of game—1 hour Hooper, of course scored on his drive, and 25 minutes. Speaker was hit by a pitched ball, and there was none out when Lewis hit to McBride, who threw Yerkes out at the plate. Engel's single to right gave Moeler an opportunity to throw Speaker out at the plate and Wagner struck out, ending the inning. Johnson had good suprt all the afternoon. Gedeon making two plays at third base, which helped Yerkes hit for two bases down the left field line and when he tried to stretch it into a triple Gedeon grabbed Shanks' throw and dived into Yerkes, retiring him. Gedeon made a similar play on Wagner in the seventh. The Red Sox shortstop hit the scoreboard with a long ay and was nailed by Moeller's throw to deon, who once more took a dive into the base runner.

Ray Collins pitched a good game of ball, but he also had the breaks. There were any number of balls hit hard, but right at some infielder, and this helped materially to prevent the Nationals from scoring. The most deceptive thing about Collins' delivery is h's motion. He bends himself into a knot before delivering the ball and the batter does not see it until it is on its way to the plate. Collins displayed much improved form over the game he pitched here earlier in the sea-

Bob Groom got himself out of many tight holes in the morning game. Like Wood he was none too steady, but when it was necessary for him to tighten up he came through, which was not the case with Wood. Wood, by the way, does not appear to be in the form he displayed last season. He lacked control, and his fast ball did not bother the local batters at is usually does.

Jake Stahl predicts that if his team will have as much good luck later in the season as it has had bad breaks to date, that it will still win the pennant. There has not been a time this spring when the Red Sox have been intact. Stahl has been out continuously. Wood for a while, and Gardner and Lewis, too, have been on the hospital list. Lewis, in fact, should not be playing now, but he was forced to get in the game yesterday because Henricksen was taken ill. For real tough breaks the Red Sox are almost on an equal with the Nationals.

That Griffith picked up a most promising recruit in Joe Gedeon is being demonstrated by that young man's work at third base, a position with which he is not at all familiar. Gedeon, who is but nineteen years old, gives all the earmarks of becoming a really great ball player. His chief asset is nerve, for he fears nothing and is never disconcerted by anything that may happen. On two different eccasions yesterday he made plays at third possible by diving into base runners who were trying to reach his station. It was the only way that he could have made the plays, and he took the chance. Furthermore, Gedeon looks impressive at

But for Heinie Wagner the chances are that the Nationals would have won the second game. It was his remarkable handling of throws from Carrigan when some of the locals tried to steal that presented them from so doing. When it
